Cytochrome P-4502E1 expression in immortalized hepatocytes and in primary culture of rat hepatocytes. In order to determine whether cytochrome P-4502E1 (CYP2E1) expression in normal liver is regulated by tumor promoters and implicated in its toxicity, human CYP2E1 was cloned and its regulation was studied in immortalized rat hepatocytes and primary culture of rat hepatocytes. The human CYP2E1 gene was cloned by the method of PCR, and expressed in yeast cells as a fusion protein with glutathione-S-transferase (GST). After confirming the identity of the CYP2E1 cDNA, the expression of the CYP2E1-GST fusion protein in yeast cells was investigated. About 1% of the total cellular proteins from transformed and un-transformed yeast cells were immunologically recognized with an anti-human CYP2E1. The CYP2E1-GST fusion protein was purified with glutathione-agarose beads and the production of 3'-phosphoadenosine 5'-phosphate was demonstrated with the reconstituted enzyme assay.
